BY MES. CAROLINE LEE MENTE. They storp in death—the summer gales. Sigh ofer their greeny bed; Where marganing Nature softly walls Above the early dead.

They sleep in death—the dewe of night, That weep upon their tomb, Ne'er montaned flowers more awest and bra More transient in their blosse.

Ains! the dewe of night still fall, The flowers of autumn glow, While they, the lovelisms flowers of all, Blighted and pale, the low. They wake in Heuven—with angels fair-Children of glory now— Ceinstial biumome wreathe their hair. And crown each beaming brow

And in such youthful hand they hold A sweet and golden type— Rejoice—two clustules are excelled. In Heaven's eternal choir They live in Henren—a kinder breast Than fondest mothers bear, Cradies them to their Eden rest, With never-slumbering care.
